Seen & Heard Around Murray

One of the small disappointments in life is to go out and start the car and have visions of getting into a warm car with the heater going full blast, then go out and find the thing has bogged down, and icy wind is coming from the heater which is running on the battery.

Roasting around in the pantry looking for some succulent tidbit yesterday and we happened on this small can of smoked salmon (we call it salmon) while some folks call it millimons). To get back to the salmon, we opened it up and spread it tenderly on crisp crackers. Tasted so good, we just got a package of crackers and the can and went out and watched the Vikings and the Cowboys have a go at each other.

Winter Storm Buffets West

by United Press International Storms continued to buffet the Northwest and Northeast to day while clear skies dominated most of the Plains, the South and the Great Basin.

The Northwest was hit by a storm center off Canada, spreading rain along the coast of Washington and Oregon. Rivers in Washington and Idaho continued to rise as rainwater poured from slopes recently covered with snow.

Elk City, Idaho, was cut off from the outside world Monday as the south fork of the Clearwater River ran two feet deep over Idaho 14 and knocked over telephone poles.

In the East, a storm over Lake Ontario held snow from the Great Lakes to New England. Travelers warnings were in effect across most of the Virginia and western North Carolina and from western New York state into New England.

A heavy snow watch was in effect this morning for Maine.

An Allegheny Airlines prop jet Monday night crashed in light snow near Bradford, Pa., killing 11 persons and injuring 17.

The Upper Plains states were still digging out from under additional snowfall. In Appleton, Minn., wind-whipped snow was blamed for a pileup of two ambulances, eight automobiles and a snow plow in which one man was killed. Chicago's O'Hare Airport had some of its worst days Sunday and Monday as servicemen and college students clogged the terminals waiting for delayed or cancelled flights after 5 inches of snow hit the city.

State police Monday set up roadblocks to prevent motorists from leaving Mason City, Iowa, because of impassable roads.

Warm weather was again limited to southern portions of Florida and California, while clear skies extended across the South from California to the Carolinas.

Dense fog choked the central valley of California for the 10th straight day.

Burley Prices Are Still Holding Firm

Defecting Elector Upheld By Congress On Monday

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Electoral College method of picking a president was created in 1804. In 1805, there started a clamor for reform that finally could come in the 91st Congress.

House and Senate members proclaimed loudly for change Monday while voting to reject a move to void an electoral vote that had been committed to Richard M. Nixon but was cast for George C. Wallace, the third party candidate.

The Senate voted 58-33, the House 228-169, to reject a See Editorial "Abolishment A Must" challenge raised by Sen. Edmund S. Muskie, D-Maine, and Rep. James O'Hara, D-Mich., against the vote cast by Dr. Lloyd W. Bailey of Rocky Mount, N.C.

Bailey was an elector for Nixon, who carried North Carolina, but switched to Wallace when the time came to vote.

The House and Senate acted on the challenge as a prelude to certifying the election of Richard M. Nixon as president with 301 electoral votes. This normally is a mere formality, required by law.

Through the two hours of debate in each house on the Muskie-O'Hara challenge ran one thread of agreement — that a change in the electoral college is long overdue.

"We tried to build up motivation for reform," Muskie told newsmen when he was asked what his move achieved.

"We won't know for a few days what the public response has been. But I do hope leaders in the private sector pick up the idea."

Chairman Emanuel Celler, D-N.Y., said his House Judiciary Committee "will start hearings soon" on several proposals for reform. Sen. Birch Bayh, D-Ind., said his constitutional amendments subcommittee would open hearings some time this month.

Mrs. Keller announced that the mid-winter board meeting and conference of the Kentucky Federation of Women's Clubs will be held in Lexington January 27-29. Mrs. Keller will attend this meeting and on January 28 will serve on a panel to discuss "Strategies of Community Improvement."

Several departments of the club responded to the request for assistance for the local Head Start program with a contribution of approximately $450. This money will be used to purchase needed equipment.

Mrs. Keller appointed Mrs. Harold Beaman and Mrs. John Stamps to serve on the Calloway County Extension Council. This council is composed of representatives of various local organizations.

The board voted to purchase a Kentucky state flag for the club house.

Board members in attendance at the meeting were Mrs. Keller, Mrs. James Garrison, finance, Mrs. Don Hunter, second vice, Mrs. A. G. Wilson, recording secretary, Mrs. Don Tucker, corresponding secretary, Mrs. Purdon Outland, treasurer, Mrs. J. L. Smoke, Smoke, Smoke — It filled the coin laundry opposite the Murray State University Library last night. Clothing left in a dryer caught fire and caused the blaze. The smoke dimmed the long string of lights at the upper part of the picture and the figure of a fireman can be dimly made out at the left. Fire Chief Flavel Robertson is at the right preparing to use the ventilator to pull smoke from the laundry. Little damage other than smoke damage resulted from the burning clothing. ABOLISHMENT A MUST

THE abolishment of the Electoral College and the Electoral system of electing a president is now clearly necessary if the will of the people of the United States in electing a president is to be maintained.

With congressional approval of the action of a North Carolina elector in casting his vote for George Wallace, in spite of the fact that the state's majority of voters indicated they preferred Richard Nixon, it now becomes vital that legislation be passed which will protect the franchise of the individual voter.

Heretofore, if the majority of a state's voters cast their vote for a certain candidate, then custom decreed that the electors of that state follow suit to insure election of that candidate.

A precedent was set when the North Carolina elector chose to defy this unwritten law and vote the way he personally wanted to.

If we are bound only by tradition and not by law, in this matter of electing their votes, this in effect could conceivably disenfranchise fully half the voters in the land if a goodly number of electors merely got together and decided who they would like to have for president. This, without regard to the mandate which was laid down for them by the voter.

The abolishment of the electoral system should be one of the first orders of business for the current session of congress.

Of course congress could retain the electoral system and merely pass legislation making it mandatory that electors follow the guidelines set down by voters.

We have labored for many years under the impression that it behooved the elector to follow the demand of the majority of the voters of his state. We have been wrong and it has taken the presumptuous elector from North Carolina to wake us up.

Tradition means nothing to some people. We thought for years that a third term for president was not in accordance with the law, until President Roosevelt considered himself indispensable and sought and won a third term, and indeed, a fourth.

It took congressional action to prevent this from recurring and now a person is bound by law to only two terms in the White House.

A complete study of this issue should be made at once and the necessary laws passed so that the candidate for whom the majority votes will be named the president. No technicality should be left open to allow some person other than the rightful one, to ascend to this office.

LONDON — A Western diplomat, explaining the intractability of a big power settlement being imposed in the Middle East situation:

Veterans Questions and Answers

Q — My husband, a World War II veteran, died in 1958. We did not have any children. My application for a pension was denied at that time because I had only been married to my husband for three years. I am now unable to work because of a disability. Will this be a consideration if I should reapply for a pension?

A — In itself your disability would not be a consideration. However, a law passed in 1967 liberalized the five-year marriage requirement in effect at the time of your husband's death. Now a widow needs to have been married to the veteran only one year before his death to meet this pension eligibility requirement. For information and assistance in reapplying for a pension, contact your nearest VA regional office.

Q — I am receiving a pension for my nonservice-connected disabilities. When is the deadline for returning my income questionnaire from the Veterans Administration?

A — The deadline is Jan. 15, 1968.

Q — What is the limit on the amount of a guaranteed issue loan a veteran can obtain from a lending institution, and what is the maximum length of time allowed to repay this type of loan?

A — The VA has no limit on the amount which may be borrowed with a guaranteed loan. However, there is a limitation on the amount of the VA guaranty to the lender. The guaranty cannot be more than 60 percent of the loan and in no event can it exceed $12,500. Of home loan mortgages may run up to 30 years.

SOCIAL SECURITY Questions and Answers

More detailed rules for deciding when a hospital not certified to participate in the Medicare program can be paid for care provided in a medical emergency have been announced by Wilbur J. Cohen, Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare.

A revised regulation, published in the Federal Register, amplifies the earlier guidelines. Secretary Cohen said, by spelling out the limited circumstances under which a nonparticipating hospital will be considered the most accessible hospital equipped to furnish the required emergency services.

In medical emergencies, the Medicare law allows payment for services furnished beneficiaries living in areas not served by a participating hospital. For payment to be made, the nonparticipating hospital must meet certain minimum standards in the law and there must be a true medical emergency. Payment covers only the period of the emergency.

Over 6,900 of the Nation's hospitals, with about 97 percent of all hospital beds, have been certified to participate in the Medicare program, Secretary Cohen said. They have been found to meet both the quality standards in the Medicare law and nondiscrimination requirements of Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. The regulations on payment do not affect these hospitals.

About 190 hospitals, mostly small hospitals, are not participating in Medicare on a regular basis, but do meet the special minimum requirements for the coverage of emergency services, and have been submitting bills for such services. Some had applied for participation, but could not meet the regular Medicare quality standards or the civil rights requirements. Some have chosen not to apply for full participation.

Mainly in the South and Southwest, they account for less than one percent of the total claims for hospital services provided to Medicare beneficiaries in those two regions of the country.

Secretary Cohen said he is optimistic that even this small percentage will be reduced as the few remaining noncertified hospitals meet the requirements for full participation in Medicare.

There has been steady progress since the start of Medicare, he said, and just since January 1, 1968, a number of additional hospitals that had been submitting emergency claims have been certified for full participation in Medicare.

The rules as to the accessibility of a hospital in an emergency limit Medicare reimbursement of services furnished by a nonparticipating hospital to cases where the transport of a patient to a participating hospital would have been medically inadvisable — where a participating hospital would have taken longer to reach and where the patient's condition necessitated immediate admission to a hospital.

In rural areas where hospitals are likely to be spaced far apart, the determination of accessibility — which hospital is the nearest — must take account of the relative distance of participating and nonparticipating hospitals, the transportation facilities available, the quality of roads, the availability of beds, and other relevant factors.

Adams And Dowdy Vows Solemnized At Local Church

The marriage of Miss Sandra Susan Adams and Milburn Ross Dowdy was solemnized on Saturday, December 21, at four o'clock in the afternoon at the Spring Creek Baptist Church, Murray.

Rev. Charles A. Chumler, pastor of the church, performed the double ring ceremony. Miss Kathryn C. Smith and Don Timmons were the attendants.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Albert A. Adams of Paducah and is a 1967 graduate of Paducah High School. Mr. Dowdy is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Milburn Dowdy of West Paducah.

Mr. and Mrs. Dowdy are residing in West Paducah.

Put the towel on the ironing board, place the right side of fabric on the towel and use a damp pressing setting on the iron. Brush fabric lightly after pressing to restore pile.

Miss Allbritten And Mr. Brannon Marry In Lovely Home Ceremony

The home of Mr. and Mrs. William Rex Allbritten, Puryear, was the setting for the wedding of their daughter, Jerry Ann, to Johnny Lee Brannon, at 7:30 p.m. Friday, December 21.

Bro. Gerald D. Bland, pastor of the Puryear Baptist Church, officiated at the double ring ceremony.

Given in marriage by her father, the bride wore a champagne gown de sole gown with modified waistline and A-line skirt. Almond lace was elegantly situated on the skirt and around each sleeve. Clusters of seed pearls were scattered on each applique. Her headpiece formed dainty champagne pearls with scattered seed pearls from which a shoulder length illusion fell. The bride's only jewelry was a single strand of pearls belonging to her mother. The bridal bouquet contained lily of the valley centered with an orchid and ribbons tied in love knots.

Miss Jan Burton, maid of honor, wore an emerald green velvet street length dress fashioned much like the bride's. Her headpiece was an emerald green velvet bow with gooseberry green illusion. Miss Burton wore complimentary silver accessories and carried a silver gloved bouquet.

The guests, which included the families and close friends, were seated by Tim Brannon, cousin of the groom and George Allbritten, brother of the bride, both of whom lighted the candles. Howard Kemp served the groom as best man, and Mrs. Earl Snow, pianist, presented the program of nuptial music.

A reception was held for the guests immediately following the ceremony. Mrs. J. C. Brannon, aunt of the bride, served the punch, and Betty Brannon, sister of the groom served the cake. Also assisting in the reception were Mrs. Wm. D. Hamrick, Mrs. Alton Norwood, and Mrs. Alvin Wall.

Here's help when removing grease spots from concrete patios: use an absorbent such as fuller's earth and lime. This acts as a blotter and may remove the summer's cookout stains without further treatment. Sprinkle it on, leave awhile and sweep it up. Or scrub with a stiff broom dipped in thick detergent suds, remembering to put a little muscle into the scrubbing.

Down the Garden Path

By Mrs. W. P. WILLIAMS

"The days lead out before our eyes."

The weeks and months when none have trod, The unused year, a precious gift Directly from the hand of God."

This delightful bit of verse from the pen of Grace Noll Crowell gives a challenge to put the new year, as it advances, to the best use possible. There is not much that we can do during the winter months toward our gardening, but that little is important. Planning is so necessary and as I have mentioned before, the days when we are shut in by bad weather, give a wonderful opportunity to pore over the new catalogues as they come in.

For one thing I am always amazed at the variety of plants and need offered. Someone said that you can get everything from "Alyssum to zinnias."

A catalogue from a standard nursery is a valuable little book. By reading it closely, you can learn the size a shrub will eventually grow when reaching full height, and you can plant accordingly.

You may choose your colors from the description. They tell us which plants will do well in shade or require full sun. We are told which ones need rich soil and those that do well with little fertilizer. They remind us when to plant, how to do it and how to keep the bugs off. So all in all, I don't know of more welcome mail to a gardener than the fine well illustrated catalogues of the better nurseries.

I think we need to be warned of so-called bargains from little known companies. So many of these "bargains" are seconds or discards from the better places and often will not survive, or if they do, will always be misshapen or weak.

If a plant is worth spending money and effort on, it should be a superior one. So pull up an easy chair before the fire, get a pencil and paper and go through your catalogues. I don't know of a more delightful—or rewarding—winter pastime.

Meanwhile let us give this little New Year's Prayer: As we set our faces toward the New Year, we know full well that it will bring changes. The old must give place to the new. Time does not stand still, nor the world cease from turning. With Thou give us courage to stand upon our faith, as the spirit of the living Lord shall give us strength. In Thy name we pray. Amen.

Dear Abby

Hubby Needs a Psychiatrist

By Abigail Van Buren

DEAR ABBY: My husband has not come near me, even for a kiss, since my hysterectomy two years ago. My scar is nice and neat, not repulsive or ugly.

My husband is the type who goes around our property cutting down all the trees that are imperfectly formed. We are in our early forties. Please print your answer. He may profit by it.

DEAR "CUTDOWN": You are not a tree, and there is no reason to regard as "imperfect" a woman who bears a scar. Your husband has a far more serious "imperfection." His doesn't show, but it may require a professional to get to the root of it.

DEAR ABBY: If anybody writes in and asks you if she should marry a widower who was married to the same woman for 40 years, tell her not to.

I've been married for three months to a man who is wonderful when he's awake, but he keeps calling me "Myrtle" in his sleep. Maybe he can't help it, but I was widowed twice, and I never once called my present husband Alfred or LeRoy in my sleep, and if I can be careful, so can he.

DEAR NOT: A 40-year-old habit is not easily broken. Just remember that your husband isn't responsible for what he calls you in his sleep. (At least you know who Myrtle was.)

DEAR ABBY: My father is having an affair with a girl who is not much older than I am. (I am 24.) She went to work in his office soon after her divorce. I cannot describe how heartless I am. I have always adored my father, and now I can't even look at him.

My mother must suspect something because she looks so unhappy and worried lately, but she is proud. I don't believe my father would divorce Mother to marry this woman. She has small children and knowing my father, he's not about to raise a family at his age. Maybe, too, the young woman doesn't want an "old" man to take care of, but she is playing him for all he's worth.

Should I tell my mother? I have the feeling it might help her to talk to someone.

Should I go to my father's home? He's a person I could talk to, and I'm sure he wouldn't put up with this situation in his office for one minute.

What advice can you give me, Abby?

DEAR HEARTSICK DAUGHTER: Don't talk to your mother. And don't talk to your father's boss. (He might fire them both, and at his age, your father may not find it easy to get another job.) Try to reason with him. He's probably infatuated with this girl and flattered by her attentions. You may not be able to shake him out of the door, but it's worth a try.

DEAR ABBY: No, the handling of embarrassing, personal questions: I had an experience along these lines which might interest your readers:

One evening at our club, a woman came up to me and said, "My, your hair looks pretty." Then she grinned and added, "and the people at our table have a bet on about whether you're wearing a wig or not. Are you?"

I grinned right back at her and replied, "What a coincidence! The people at OUR table also have a bet on about whether you're wearing FALSEIES or not, but nobody had the nerve to ask you."

Needless to say, that took care of her.

Everybody has a problem. What's yours? For a personal reply write to Abby, Box 670, Los Angeles, Cal. 90069, and enclose a stamped, self-addressed envelope.

FOR ABBY'S SOCIETY, "HOW TO HAVE A LOVELY WEDDING," SEND $1.00 TO ABBY, BOX 6706, LOS ANGELES, CAL. 90069.

Calloway County Homemakers Club will be held at the Holiday Inn at ten a.m. The Council meeting will be held in the afternoon.

The Wranglers Riding Club will have a business meeting at the court house at seven p.m.

The Westside Homemakers Club will meet at the home of Mrs. Charles Parker at 12:30 p.m.

Friday, January 10
The North Murray Homemakers Club will meet at the home of Mrs. Oscar Salvers at 1:30 p.m.

Keep Them Happy And Busy With Projects

By JOAN O'SULLIVAN

"MOTHER, I don't have anything to do!" It's a common complaint on a dreary day when the darlings are rained in.

"Nothing to do," you mutter in disbelief. "What about all the toys, books and games that Santa brought you?"

Well, what about them? As

PAPER CLOTHING BAG with taped-on heart-shaped pockets makes great costume for rainy day theatrical production.

any mother will tell you, even the largest toy collection will gain you peace and quiet for only an hour or two at best. After that, the loved ones are back, bored and begging for something "new" in the way of entertainment.

If you are the clever girl most mothers become, you are ready for them because you have a library of books on tap to save a rainy day. They are books that suggest projects, the kind that will keep the kids happily absorbed for hours.

Among the best is one aptly called "The Rainy Day Book" (Trident Press, $4.95). One suspects that author Alvin Schwartz was rained in with the moppets just once too often and decided it would never happen to him again. And it won't either, for he has amassed close to a thousand ideas for passing endless hours happily when the kids are housebound.

For example: Balloon basketball; blow the ping-pong ball (whoever blows it off the opponent's end of the table wins); blow the bean with a drinking straw; tickle-toe with buttons; clothes-pin bowling; guess how many seeds in the apple before you eat it; alphabet—find 26 pictures from A to Z in a magazine.

Then there is an entire chapter on arts and crafts, using household items like boxes, buttons and popcicle sticks to pass the time.

Projects include: making a scrapbook; turning a cylindrical box into a bank; making button pictures; clothes-pin airplanes; paper bag costumes; collages; jewelry with drinking straws; mobiles;

WHAT'S MORE FUN on a rainy day than making a scrapbook? All child needs is tape, glue and magazine to cut up.

sculpting with soap; printing with potatoes. There are also projects of exploration—digging into attics, basements, closets, bureau drawers. And if you can remember back to childhood, Mom, what is more fun?

Science experiments, story telling, riddle and recipes are among other idle-hour fields explored in this book, one worth its weight in gold—at least it is on a rainy day.

Other books available are more specialized. There is, for example, "The Boy's Book of Rainy-Day Doings" by Allan A. Macfarlan (Blackpool Book, $4.50). It's definitely a more rugged volume with chapters on indoor action—tricks and tests of strength and agility, body balance, sharpshooter games, making things, handy-man projects. It's a boys'-will-be-boys-volume that a mother might find her salvation, especially during a week of rainy Mondays.

Two other books offer specialized projects that are interesting. One is "Adventures with a Party Plate," the other "Adventures with a Paper Cup," both by Harry Milgrom (E. P. Dutton, $2.95 each). You will be astounded at how much mileage (and how much time can be happily consumed) using paper plate or cup for the experiments suggested.

For good ideas guaranteed to throw some sunshine over a rain-soaked day, you can't do better than research fun ideas in the books suggested here.

College Park Airport as it looked in 1912.
By RAYMOND WILCOVE
Central Press Association Correspondent
COLLEGE PARK, Md.—The nation's oldest airport, where Wilbur Wright trained the country's first fighter pilots, is fighting for its existence, threatened by industrial encroachment and neighbors complaining of the noise.
The small airport, adjacent to the University of Maryland's main campus, has been in continuous use since 1907, when early aviation experiments took place there.
On Oct. 8, 1909, Wright began to train the first Army pilots there. Eventually, they included Benjamin D. Foulois, H. H. (Hap) Arnold, James Doolittle and many others who went on to carve important roles in American aviation.
Many records were set at the College Park Airport. These included the first flight by an American woman, Mrs. Ralph H. VanDeman, as a passenger with Wright, in 1909, and the first flight by U.S. naval officers, Lt. George Sweet, and Frank P. Lahm, also in 1909.
Here also occurred the first firing of a machine gun from an airplane, in 1912; the first photo taken from an airplane, in 1912; and the first series of radio messages sent from an airplane, heard up to 10 miles away.
Here also Lt. Hap Arnold set

THE airport is still operating as a private field for about 25 local pilots and, suitably enough, four helicopters carry out an experimental air banking service, picking up bank records and transferring them to central computers.
The airport now is threatened with extinction. Many acres have been developed into plants and factories and area residents have brought suit in an effort to bring the flying and the noise to a halt.
In an effort to save the airport, the College Park City Council has voted to purchase the facility, if the $1,860,000 sought by the owner can be raised voluntarily.
The National Aerospace Educational Memorial Center, P.O. Box 1809, College Park, Md. 20740 is attempting to obtain the funds to purchase the airport and establish also a museum and historical center on the grounds.

Centennial Scrapbook 1869

1-E The farther West railroad tracks were stretched across the Plains in 1869, the more formidable the obstacles. Bridges, tunnels, "cuts" through solid rock, engineered with ingenuity and patience, removed most of them. There was no ready means of coping with an adversary that struck during the winter of 1868-69: snow. Effects blizzards frequently had on railroads in the midlands and prairies in the Sixties were typified by one happening only seven miles west of Chicago.

A train that ran into a New Year's Day snowdrift marooned a hundred passengers. As the day wore on, fences were torn away to fuel the car-stoves. One stove, over-heated, set the roof afire. Gale winds fanned flames that had to be doused with snow.

After eight hours, a train on another railway was halted at a crossing a quarter-mile away. As passengers struggled there from the first train, the second train was buried in snow, its locomotive frozen. Fortunately a beacon improvised and it was seen by a station agent. The passengers were rescued next morning with sleighs.

There were instances of trains being buried under landslides sent hurtling down by snow.

Even in the East, where tracks were easier to keep open, snowstorms often marooned trains. Perhaps some readers of this series had such an experience. Effective snow-plows were not developed until the Eighties.

If You Are An Actor, You Are Set Apart From Others

By VERNON SCOTT

HOLLYWOOD — Ask a man what he does for a living, and if he answers "actor," he immediately sets himself apart from the rest of the working stiffs in the country.

The term "actor" brings to mind a Gregory Peck, Richard Burton or Marlon Brando. But they are stars as well, and represent a fraction of 1 per cent of the 17,000 members of the Screen Actors Guild.

The others work on a daily or weekly basis and are lucky to get by at all.

Just the other day on the set of television's "Ironside" series, one little man in his mid-30's stood nervously smoking cigarettes. He was memorizing about the two brief lines he was to speak in a scene with Raymond Burr, the show's star.

"This is only my second job in two months," the little man said, running his hand through a mass of long hair.

"Christmas is coming up and I need the dough for the family. It's not easy making a family like this. We have two kids and another on the way. We're barely making it."

Asked why he didn't find more gainful employment, the man looked stunned.

"I'm an actor," he said with astonishment. This is his whole life. When I get up in the morning and I know I've got a part the day is like being born all over again. I come alive."

He went on to say he has been acting a dozen years, earning out a living at $150 a day when he works. During those endless weeks when his agent is unable to find him a part he lines up at the unemployment window to collect $50 or $60 a week.

"I've been promised some work on 'The Virginian' and I know one of the casting people at MGM," he said.

"And if they come through, I'll be in pretty good shape over the holidays. The thing to do is get your face well enough known so you're a type that casting directors or producers think about when they're putting a show together."

Unhappily, the man's face is like a million others.

"Then you got to figure the chance of a big break, you know. Suppose I get a fairly decent part and come on like gangbusters. Not that I ever expect to become a star, but maybe a steady character actor instead of a bit player."

Yes, but why not find a good job during the long dry spells? "And miss an opportunity?" he asked. "Don't forget, I'm an actor. You tell people that and they have more respect for you."

He returned to memorizing his two lines. His eyes were bright and his hands trembled as he held the script.

Coffin Closes On The Soul Of Jazz

By M. GENE MEAKINS

NEW ORLEANS (UPI) — They closed a cloth-covered coffin Friday on "The Soul of New Orleans Jazz."

The coffin also closed on an era, a man and his music that thrilled and haunted jazz lovers and established 66-year-old clarinetist George Lewis as one of the best loved New Orleans musicians.

More than 500 persons, including the elite of New Orleans jazz, turned out for his funeral in spite of rain and cold. Lewis, creator of "Burgundy Street Blues" for the past 23 years had helped carry the sound of New Orleans jazz to New York, London, Paris and Tokyo.

The Eureka and Olympia brass bands, the jazz fans, cameramen, newsmen, Lewis' family and friends, marched to the onetime manual laborer, a longshoreman to the McDonoghville gravesite Friday.

The dreary day underlined the dirges of a music that also appears to be dying. Adding to the sorrow was the scheduling of a second jazz funeral, for Adolphus L. Alexandria, a saxophone player who devoted 45 of his 70 years to the saxophone and clarinet, was a member of Oscar "Papa" Celestine's band for several years. He played at the White House correspondents annual dinner during President Eisenhower's administration and on many occasions he teamed with Lewis.

Tom Sacton, a young white clarinetist playing with the predominantly Negro Olympia band at graveside Friday, called Lewis "the soul of New Orleans jazz."

The funeral was marked more by the sadness of "Nearer My God To Thee" and "Westlawn Dirge" than by the customary that often highlights such events after mourners leave the cemetery.

In spite of a token "When the Saints Go Marching In," even the brief march from the cemetery to the nearby park, where area was solemn. Although jazz fans begged the Olympia band to continue the music, the increasing downpour put a stop to it.

Two Mexico City detectives arrived at the scene of the murder of Juan Gonzalez. They examined the room in which he was found, and the body, but couldn't find a murder weapon. Finally one detective volunteered that the man was killed by a golf club.

"Golf club?" his partner said, "What in the world is that?" "I don't know," the other detective replied, "but it certainly made a hole in Juan."

Of course equal pay for equal work is as old as the work itself.

She runs from one room to another and seems not to hear words of encouragement. She sniffs the air as the timid Antelope when the winds brings the foreboding scent of the Jaguar. She gets a crossed look in her eye and is not at all herself.

Lamb chops are good, but they are just not worth going through all that rigmarole with Lady. We don't know what it is about lamb chops that brings on this wildness but after going through it a couple of times, we find it easier to just forget lamb chops.

Looking ahead to late March, we dug a big chunk of white turkey meat out of the freezer to thaw out. You just have to have foresight on things of this nature.

A pretty stewardess on a Washington-Miami flight had her hands full, fending off two drunks who would not let up. The one seated in the front of the plane was doing his best to persuade her to come to his apartment. At the rear, the second drunk was trying for an invite to her apartment.

As the plane headed for the runway, the front-seat pest handed her a key and a slip of paper on which he had written his address. "Here's the key and my address," he whispered. "See you tonight?"

"Okay," she whispered back with a smile as she headed for the drunk at the rear.

She handed him the key and slip of paper and said, "Don't be late."

Bilked Of $3,400 And Diamonds By Friendly Women

LEXINGTON, Ky. (UPI) — Mrs. W. R. Morton, Lexington, told police here Friday she had been bilked of $3,400 in cash and six diamonds in a confidence game.

Mrs. Morton filed a formal complaint against two unidentified women, described as about 25 years old, whom she said promised her $6,000 in "found money" if she would put up some form of security to show good faith.

In her complaint, Mrs. Morton told police a woman approached her on the street and asked directions to a local office. She said as she gave directions, a second woman approached carrying a briefcase and told Mrs. Morton and the other woman it contained a "large sum of money."

The second woman said she would take the briefcase to a "Mr. Joe E. Levine" whose office was nearby. She returned shortly and said "Mr. Levine" had called "authorities in Washington" who said the money could be kept by the finders.

Mrs. Morton said the woman then offered her $3,400 as her "share" but "Mr. Levine" would hold the money until she put up some security to "prove her trust."

Mrs. Morton said she put up the cash and gems, then went to see "Mr. Levine" about getting her share of the money.

She entered the building, discovered there was no "Mr. Levine," and when she returned to the street, the two women had disappeared.

The swindle is known as the "pigeon drop."

BLIND PIANIST

nique is not obviously a problem for Mr. Bennett, very much to his credit. He handled the fast portions of Schumann's Novelette (Op. 21, No. 8) and Schubert's "Wanderer" Fantasy with clean, agile fingers and work and forceful rhythm.

Chopin's C sharp minor Scherzo and Albeniz's "Fete-Disco a Seville" were admirably played in every way; they had a large-scale format, plenty of color and the fine tone that he brought to everything he tackled.

More recently, the critic of The Washington Post commented: "George Bennett played a real act of the National Gallery last night with the kind of musicianly concentration that is rare among pianists. . . he left an indelible impression."

Mr. Bennett is also an experienced chamber music player, and his recordings with Ruben Varga, of Brahms' Three Sonatas for Violin and Piano are to be released early this year by Music Heritage Records. Although he performs the music of all periods, this pianist is particularly dedicated to the idea of bringing 20th Century music to his audiences.

"There is," he says, "a vast repertoire of piano music written in the past 60 years which should become as familiar to performers and listeners as that of the two preceding centuries."

George Bennett, with his wife and two sons, lives in New York City where he is Director of the Lighthouse Music School and a member of the faculty of The College of Mount Saint Vincent.

The concert will be at 8:00 p.m. Wednesday, January 8th in the recital hall of the Price-Doyle Fine Arts Building. Please note that the main entrance is blocked by construction, and that the back door or lower fire escape on the north side of the building must be used to gain entrance, a spokesman said.

The concert is an event of noteworthy interest. It is also free of charge.

TV CAMEOS: Cheryl Miller

Cheryl's Pure Show Biz—But Normal, Yet!

By MEL HEIMER

THERE IS a tradition in show biz that child actors, having been shepherded into working when they ought to have been out playing marbles, grow up to become drug addicts or drunks who hate their mothers—their dreadful, pushy, money-hungry mothers—and there is some truth to it. Cheryl Miller is an exception to the rule.

"I started working even before the cradle," she says with a smile. "Movie scouts who needed a quiet baby in the Gary Cooper film 'Casanova Brown' found me in St. John's Hospital, in Sherman Oaks, Calif., and I guess as an infant and small child I was in more than a hundred films."

"With this difference, my mother watched over me like a lady eagle, made sure I had a pretty normal childhood, and never let it get out of hand. Once I remember I was ill for a couple of months, and my mother knocked off all work for me for a year. She said having me healthy was all that mattered and the acting was unimportant."

THE RESULT of this tender, loving maternal care is that Cheryl, who plays Paula Tracy in the waning "Daktari" TV series for CBS, has grown into a beautiful, nice blonde, with the fringe benefit of being intelligent, who has a respectful attitude toward acting but doesn't think it's the Alpha and Omega of life. Strangely for an actress, she wants to latch onto a husband and raise kids.

"I like to act and sure, a good part would elate me," she says, "but I have, after all, proved to myself I can do it and maybe it's time to move along to something else."

Cheryl has been in the show since its inception as, originally, an hour and a half movie feature called "Clarence, the Cross-Eyed Lion." Clarence, of course, is an integral part of the series and Miss Miller says he's a dreamboat. "I guess because he's cross-eyed," she deduces, "he always likes to have people around, to steer him here and there and take care of him." Her only grudge is against the yellowjackets that seem to infect the luncheon area at Tyan Tyan's ranch in California, where most of the shooting takes place. "One bit Marshall Thompson on the tongue and he spent three or four days in a hospital with it," she says with a shudder.

HERS REMAINS a closely-knit family, and she remembers when her brother, who also did bit roles in films when he was young, got out of dental school and hung out his shingle—or is it a set of false teeth?—"I pitched in and moonlighted for him as his dental assistant," she says with a smile. "Worked all day at the Disney studios and then you'd go over to Gary's office, put on a white lab coat, and go to work there. Now, he's one of the best people in the business. My mother opened a travel agency around the same time, and on the movie set I used to hand out dentist and travel agency cards to the crewmen."

CHERYL DID a four or five-year stretch on the "Donna Reed Show," which she admits candidly, wasn't as happy a TV family as the "Daktari" troupe—and also was guested on "Perry Mason," "The Farmer's Daughter" and other programs. She takes flying lessons, aka, cooks, has a Scottish terrier named Artemus and has a letter from President Kennedy congratulating her for being the most physically fit schoolgirl in the San Fernando Valley. And she's a band-hunting. Lines will form both right and left, please.
